

MARKETING

The new US consumer mindset

August 10, 2020

Sofie Lundberg is senior content marketing and social media executive at GlobalWebIndex

By Sofie Lundberg

In unprecedented times, behaviors fluctuate dramatically partly because mindsets are changing fast.

Consumers become worried about new things, more risk-averse, more alert. Their aspirations and hopes for the future change, as do the things they value and hold closest to their hearts.

And while most leading businesses have long understood the value of unique insight into their target audiences' attitudes, interests and thought processes, it has never been more important to look deeper into your consumer's changing mindset.

Why psychographic needs more focus in advertising

Focusing on consumer opinions, feelings and motivations, psychographic data brings demographic research to life. Without it, you know who your consumers are, but not why they do the things they do.

From a global pandemic to civil upset, the United States is seeing massive change at the moment, and with this comes new and evolving ways of thinking and perceiving.

Our new GWUSA data set offers fresh insight into the modern American consumer, through which we can analyze consumers using more than 600 psychographic data points. Looking under the lens of advertising, some interesting truths come to light.

For instance, only 9 percent of Americans say they feel represented in the advertising they see.

For an industry in which the sole focus is to reach and resonate with your audience, this points to a huge disconnect between brands and the consumers that they are trying to reach. Looking closer at U.S. consumers under a multicultural lens, here is what we see:

- Only 11 percent of African Americans and 7 percent of Asian Americans feel represented in advertising.
- A fifth of Asian Americans and a quarter of Hispanic Americans say they prefer ads that reflect their culture.
- Thirty-one percent of African Americans prefer ads that reflect their culture.

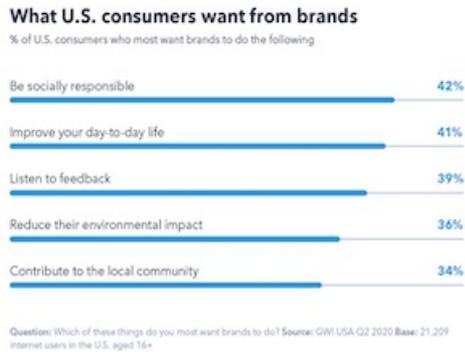

Insight such as this offers clear direction on the kind of advertising and messaging U.S. consumers want which is exactly what advertisers need in uncertain and unprecedented times.

Now let us look at what's on the minds of American consumers more broadly in the midst of major change.

What is on the minds of today's U.S. consumers?

1. Corporate social responsibility is key for engaging them

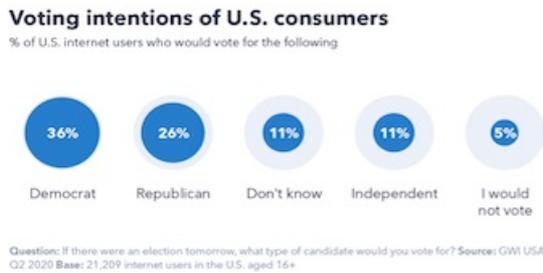

Consumers in 2020 demand more of their favorite brands than great products or services their one most important request is that they take social responsibility.

What U.S. consumers want from brands. Source: GlobalWebIndex

2. The majority would vote Democrat were there an election tomorrow

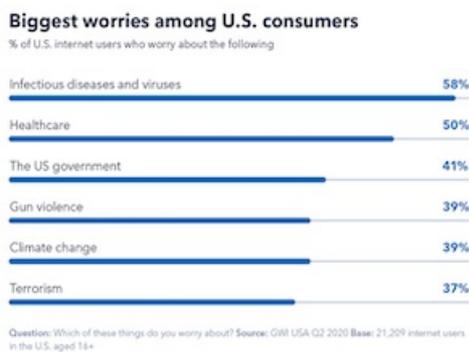

Ahead of Republican at 26 percent, 36 percent of U.S. consumers would vote Democrat at the moment. But 11 percent are still unsure where their vote would go.

Voting intentions of U.S. consumers. Source: GlobalWebIndex

3. Viruses top the list of worries

Ahead of fears such as terrorism, gun violence, and climate change, health is at the forefront of U.S. consumers' minds.

Biggest worries among U.S. consumers. Source: GlobalWebIndex

This is also reflected in the question on their current hopes and aspirations, where health comes out top on 59 percent ahead of being happy (52 percent) and being financially secure (47 percent).

4. More than a quarter see their personal finances negatively

Nine percent of Americans say they are "struggling" with their personal finances. But it is not all bad news more than a third describe themselves as "comfortable."

OK Comfortable Tight Struggling

Question: How would you describe your current financial situation? Source: GWI USA Q2 2020 Base: 21,209 internet users in the U.S. aged 16+

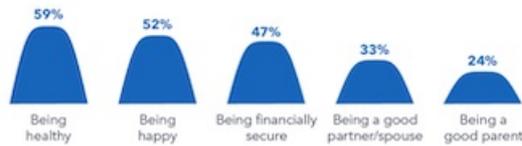

Financial perspectives among U.S. consumers. Source: GlobalWebIndex

5. Health is top of mind for the future

Not surprisingly, Americans are focusing on their health in 2020. This comes in ahead of aspects such as happiness and money.

Hopes and aspirations of U.S. consumers

% of U.S. internet users who say the following is a top hope or aspiration right now

Question: From this list, what would you say are your top 3 hopes or aspirations right now? Please select up to three answers Source: GWI USA Q2 2020 Base: 21,209 internet users in the U.S. aged 16+

Hopes and aspirations of U.S. consumers. Source: GlobalWebIndex

Regional spotlight: Californian consumers

By delving deeper into the data, you can get a more targeted view of your consumer. As an example, here is an exploration of Californian consumers compared to the rest of the U.S.

The average Californian is:

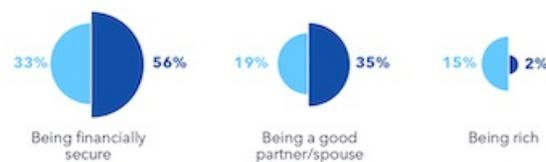

- 37 percent more likely to identify as atheist
- 33 percent more likely to describe themselves as vegan
- 23 percent more likely to eat food from delivery services regularly
- 22 percent more likely to take a vacation in a different country every six months
- 21 percent more likely to describe their political views as liberal
- 12 percent more likely to say they're worried about climate change

Let us dive even deeper and compare Californian baby boomers and Gen Z.

Differences in hopes and aspirations

% of Californians in the following age groups who say the following is a top hope or aspiration right now

● Gen Z ● Baby Boomers

Question: From this list, what would you say are your top 3 hopes or aspirations right now? Please select up to three answers about? Source: GWI USA Q2 2020 Base: 394 Gen Z aged 16-23 and 579 baby boomers from California aged 57-77

Differences in hopes and aspirations. Source: GlobalWebIndex

Differences in fears and worries

% of Californians in the following age groups who worry about the following

● Gen Z ● Baby Boomers

Question: Which of these things do you worry about? Source: GWI USA Q2 2020 Base: 394 Gen Z aged 16-23 and 579 baby boomers from California aged 57-77

Differences in fears and worries. Source: GlobalWebIndex

Moving forward with psychographic data

We know as we venture further into the "next normal," old strategies will no longer resonate with consumers that are facing new challenges.

With less than 10 percent of Americans feeling represented in the advertising they see, there is a clear and problematic divide between how brands and consumers think.

TO MOVE WITH the mindsets of U.S. consumers, the way brands use psychographic must change to match. Here is how to get started.

1. Revisit your audience segments and personas.
2. Look as far ahead as possible.
3. Tell emotionally compelling, but culturally sensitive, stories.
4. Keep coming back to refreshed, attitudinal research and adapt alongside.

Sofie Lundberg is senior content marketing and social media executive at GlobalWebIndex.

MOST POPULAR

1. Legal landmines that brands may face as COVID-19 restrictions are lifted in US
2. Thoughts on diamonds
3. Getting rich push notifications right in Apple's iOS 10
4. Three reasons why Google's Android is succeeding
5. Are exhibitions a wise investment for luxury brands?
6. Most influential logos of all time – and what you can learn from them
7. Webinar on May 13: China Luxury Rebound: Lessons for Other Markets
8. Balenciaga sued by car-freshener maker for allegedly copying \$3 pine tree design
9. The greening of luxury
10. A stratospheric \$450.3M Salvator Mundi sale: Power of brand and rarity prevails